To whom this may concern:

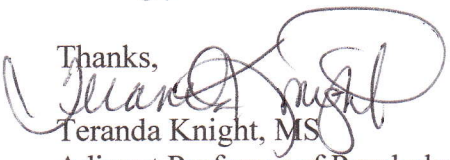

I am Teranda Knight. I am an Adjunct Professor of Psychology at NC Wesleyan College in Rocky Mount, NC. Jessica Rogers was a student in my Psychology Research Design and Analysis Course I & II at NC Wesleyan College in Rocky Mount, NC.

During this time I learned a lot about Ms. Rogers's implicit knowledge of research designs and analysis. She expressed to me numerous times wanting to explore a career in research. During her time in my course she had shown the ability to grasp concepts with self learning and from the class room environment. Her determination to learn the information on her own shows a great level of independence and her participation in class showed a great level of teamwork. These are two important attributes to being a good research assistant and one day a great researcher.

Ms. Rogers's background does not express any experience in the field but her character and personal presentations shows that she can be strong in the field with the proper education and guidance. She is very independent and quick to catch on. Ms. Rogers's did complete and research study in her Sociology 215 course, in which she carried out each area of research design and analysis completely and effectively. In our course she did not actually do the study but she was required to provide the knowledge of each area for completion of the course. There for she has completed both components of learned and carrying out of research at the educational level.

I strongly recommend her and stand behind her ethically and academically.

Thanks,

Teranda Knight, MS
